

Problem 7

1. On different runs, you'll get different percentage values. Can you explain why?

Ans: because on each run of the program, the function random.random randomly select the items from original dataset for training set and testing set, namely the training set and testing set on each run of program are constructed by different data, that is why different percentage values are obtained on different runs.